re Mrs. M. F. Anderson

And we can make them welcome to our own table, or if to be independent, they prefer it, can at the next house secure excellent table board for them with a very pleasant and suitable family. I have urged it as far as prudent, and shall arrange to put such indirect pressure to bear as may accomplish the purpose, and they were the most as to the object in view. If this plan can be accomplished I shall keep them here long enough to reach a satisfactory conclusion if I can, and pursue such rise

Sholl, Dr. E. — re Mrs. M. F. Anderson it best not to transcribe too closely, the² I know that M^{rs} volatile disposition often pained her very much. Now I can see where a suppressing hand kindly put forth, would have left but little necessity for a guidance that none can give now when needed most. I have had no answer from her as to her coming here but understand that she expects to come here for a few days after her visit to Grandpa.

One thing is evident very clearly, no matter what may be the condition of things short of actual alteration of mind, some one whom she respects³ and who also can throw some influence around her, must stand to her in the place of a parent.
To that end I write you that her cousin Anson Rainey (son of Max a hatchie Jones) is a man of good character and judgment.
Her aunt Mrs Rainey, she loves, is a most excellent woman. Her cousin Mrs Wash with whom she would be associated a woman of excellent character and equal mind. There is the proper place for the Children, As their relative I write them & urge you to write to Mr Rainey at once, and request him to press the children's coming there at the earliest practicable date, and to communicate with them and with Sally's guardian, that they go there at once from your house, and let nothing make such final adjustment of their household matters as in his wisdom he deems best. It may be well to say, that your own judgment in this matter accords entirely with that of their friends who are the children's well wishers, and who from their ownings and knowledge of affairs believe this to be the wisest course to be pursued in their ultimate interest. There they will be safely housed, and with the power of a constraining affection to guide them, and with gradually restored physical health and occupation the problem will be solved.

Your letter shall be preserved for your use.
I will write again when I have anything definite. Mrs A. is a lady of well balanced mind, and power of observation far keener than Mr. Rainey, and has seen much of the world. I have great confidence in her judgment in such matters, and give it great deference. Yrs E. H. Sholl
