about Budd son, last Christmas - just at the time of Uncle Len's death - and among other libellous statements - told the Chancellor that his father's estate was being sued on account of his name being on Budd's hand - and stated that Capt McGee was suing for his fees as Sheriff - which statement was made, to injure him offe-cially. The Chancellor wrote to Budd about it - and Budd after proving to the Chancellor's satisfaction that the charges were false - called Joe to account for writing the letter - Joe flatly denied having written to the Chancellor - and did not so in the presence of the other clerk at the B. & Laan office Budd told him that either he or Simpson had shown the letter. Joe then admitted that he had written it. He said that all the family had persuaded him to do it, & that your sister & Charlie had attacked him to write it. It was not just; he tried to lay the blame on you. I know that Budd trusts him, and if he had been any one else than your brother would have had some punishment. Joe did all this, just to shield Windham - you know that Windham has always had undue influence over him and never for any good purpose - I think that Joe must love Windham better than his Sisters or else he is afraid of Windham - As to the statement about "Mr. ^{Sherrill} Gee's fees - Capt McWhie has never called on Budd for his fees - for the very good reason that he owed Budd a much larger sum of money than his fees amounted to. Mr. Fulgham filed a claim ^{for the fees} against your father's estate without saying a word to Budd about it - or without going here

Don't ever write me or tell any of your friends
about that I tried to get my money out of Bud C hands because how it would be to see how he has treated me & again how I tried to see
an arrow. He knows that he was doing wrong & never have seen him since that he acted so disgraceful out here when your Ellie was a corpse, come out here so soon that he could not stand up & Gipsie & I had to be up nearly all night with her
alone with her and such bald as he carried. I would never repeat

I am more than grateful for which I will ever cherish ^{his memory} Sep was paid for his work for Carrie paid him. He came out here & that he should be was passed for money & if she could pay him thirty dollars without inconvenience to let him have it when he went to Florida he borrowed 150 one hundred and fifty. Joe said that he took money out of his own pocket for his
him. How much did he do for the poor lady on the other side of the house He married Joe and as for help building their house

Dear Cousin Sep,

I received a letter from Cousin Lou this morning in which she states that she came faint to your house late drunker negroid one night and nearly frightened Cousin Sue to death. That if she had known what was coming she would never have opened to me the door to me - that my visit was an insult and that she owe her an apology. To quote her own words "she writes" "I consider it a grave insult, you to come in our house, but I reckon you consider it yours by right but let me tell you, we have some sense, if you do think you have it all, but it is more than others think. I can have a law-suit about this place & dont care if the lawyers get it all. We are not indebted to your father for anything".... how much do he do for the poor kin on the other side of the house. he married poor. to think you would have the assurance to say any thing about this place. What brother would not help his sister, it was his duty. but I dont think you will ever have any to help you." and she goes on in the same strain at some length. If I ever get so being with office work and other matters I don't copy the whole letter & enclose it to you - as you have the care of Cousin Lou, it may be well for you to see the peculiar condition of mind she is in -

My recollection is that he knocked 3 times twice at the door but not very noisily, that when Cousin Lou came to the window. I told her we had come out to see Cousin Sep on business matters & apologized for coming at night, telling her that owing to Uncle Levi's death, we had not sent to Paul off'n that day & consequently did not get until after supper the letter written by Pully & Steele.
