Dear Charley,

How are you old fellow are you yet alive one would suppose you had committed suicide as you have not been heard of for so long a time, and as our Mutual friend Horace Finnally, comes in company with Mr. Finnally for old times sake I thought I would just drop you a line & let you know you are found & fellow Gallant in former days as well & would like to hear from you. I find Chunky very much, have you quit the worse entirely, & injured yourself to that degree for which I am fearful you are destined, without more decisive action on your part, to that of an old Bachelor. 'You are you Charley, I would have something in the way of a wife certain, & nothing else (as they have it down in these parts) but will never do to give up the ship, but hang out your colors, and maintain them. I have just heard that our old friend (Mr. Finnally) young friend Mr. M. C.
Pines, is to be married, & is taking to herself a big man for life, in the form of Mr. Sellick, who would have thought it, quite a speculation, & I flatter myself she will make him a glorious wife. Charley you would not to have heard that, you certainly, from long practice, have had the power to estimate a female dearest long, we should think of speaking, as you know he is slow to attack, with but little positive, but there are the dangers kind, well, well, "I must be," as I know, has it, one or two more, and all my lady acquaintances from the will have been fiddled off, & I shall then have no distractions of your way, I rather think it will go to the heart of M. & L. who will be sure you will be a better person, but I don't know if it had some comfort to yourself & me (Charles). Who is catching up your way, has old Josh withdrawn from the party, poor fellow I heard he was in bad health, hope he has recovered, give him my respects. How is Mrs. M. & P. I must go now and I'll C. & M. & the women who are here, who are in a very much state of the ship, & allantry, give them all my love, would send them a piece of my hair, but in account of the hot weather had it all cut off, I'm in the old set M. Reynolds is in my old track, tell him to go, but to keep a little off, as he might be a little better, but I my heart's wish for success, will give him a line as soon as I finish this foolishness. I have no more to write so regards the City only that it is a look as the weather, a million of things to among you, but so far clear of the Yellow Jack, but they are looking for it to break out every day, which I hope will never happen, but if it much come, amongst the rest will have to stand the only & must an all-wise Providence for the result. I have determined to live here, I think it is best to stay the same place & be over it, & then all will be well. Answer this letter (Charley if you please, & if you don't please, do it any how, & give me all the news, Horace will tell you what I have left out.
