FOLDER 2 Personal MEMENTOS

SECURE THE SHADOW, ERE THE SUBSTANCE FADE.

While health is blooming on the cheek,
And beauty's light enthrones thy brow,
And every feature seems to speak
The warmth of life's full tidal flow,
Ye rarely think the forms ye love
May soon be numbered with the dead,
No more with joy our hearts to move,
No more the path of life to tread.

Behold that bright and fair-haired boy,
With lightsome step and sparkling eye!
His image is his mother's joy,
Her heart to him is ever nigh.
To-day thy heart with hope o'erflows,
While gazing on his cherub face,
To-morrow comes, and, woe of woes!
He's gone and leaves behind no trace.

Behold the maiden, bright and fair,—
The youth just verging on the man,—
The father with his silv'ry hair,
Whose life is but a little span;
The brother, sister, mother dear!
Stern death destroys them with his blight,
And all must surely disappear,
All soon must vanish from our sight.

Ah! then how dearly do ye prize
Each slight memento of the dead!
The little shoe of finest size—
Or little bonnet for the head.
How secretly preserve each dress,—
The waxen doll,—or broken toy,—
Or yet perchance a curling tress,
That made so beautiful a boy!

Say then, if these such joy impart,
And wake the crystal tear of love,
And bring bright mem'ries to the heart,
Emotions sad, yet sweet to move,
How should ye bless the Art that holds
Forever fix'd each life-like form,
And every speaking feature moulds
As when with life's swift current warm!

Long live Daguerre, th' ingenious Gaul,
Whose subtle brain the art disclos'd
From light the hidden pow'r to call,
That in its brilliant rays repos'd—
To paint the "human face divine"
In every look and feature true,
With each minutest shade and line,
And all its beauties bring to view.
