Dr. DAVID MOORE.

David Moore came to this county in 1815. He was born in Brunswick County, Virginia, in 1789. His father, Rev. John Moore, was a Methodist clergyman, who went to Virginia from North Carolina; and was graduated in medicine at the University of Pennsylvania. His mother was a Miss Fletcher. He was well educated. Removing at once to Tennessee after graduating in medicine, he practiced in the family of Gen. Andrew Jackson, whom he accompanied on his campaign against this State. He took a front rank as a physician and surgeon almost from the day he came to Huntsville. In 1820 he represented Madison in the popular branch of the legislature, and was fourteen times called to that position, serving as speaker in 1841. From 1822 to 1825 he served the county in the upper house. At the election for a federal senator in 1841, he was warmly urged as a suitable person for the place; but after a very exciting canvass, he was defeated by Gov. Bagby by a vote of 66 to 59. Besides these many attestations of popular confidence, Dr. Moore was a presidential elector once or twice. Just after being elected to the legislature, he died at his home in the country, Sept. 1845. Dr. Moore bore the seal of true manhood on his open countenance; and his calm bearing and considerate demeanor bespoke a gentility that nature had bestowed. His fund of practical sense, tempered by observation and experience, served him to better purpose than the showy gifts of more brilliant men. The prudence and propriety of his conduct won the esteem and regard of his fellow citizens; while his usefulness, charity, and benevolence were made effective by his ample fortune. He first married a sister of Hon. John Haywood of Tennessee; his second wife was Miss Harrison of Virginia, cousin to the president of that name, who survived him and married Dr. Charles A. Patton. Of his two sons, one was adjutant of the 26th Alabama regiment, and both are planters of this county. One of his daughters married Col. R. B. Rhett, Jr., at one time editor of the Charleston Mercury, and now residing in Madison.
