Education in Alabama
Pamphlet 401 (P9)

A BETTER QUALITY OF LIFE

Academic research not only advances the causes of science and technology, but also creates a better quality of everyday life for Alabama's 4 million residents. Whether preparing workers for high-tech jobs, developing healthier foods, finding cures for life-threatening diseases or making highways and bridges safer, Alabama's universities, community colleges, and technical schools are forging innovations.

Every citizen profits. Students and professors are tackling some of the most difficult problems that face both young and old across Alabama. When infant mortality rates drop in rural counties, families are experiencing the benefits of aggressive rural health initiatives spearheaded by public universities. When lives are saved through dramatic advances in medicine, academic research is the direct cause.

Alabama's colleges and universities are working to combat illiteracy and unemployment, while finding better ways to improve the lives of the elderly and the disabled. At the same time, we are discovering solutions that will protect Alabama's delicate environment and safeguard the state's rich natural resources.
