other, and full of enthusiastic adoration of their illustrious guest.

At about 7 o'clock the General was escorted to the Ballroom at the Bell Tavern, where was collected a numerous and brilliant assemblage of beauty. Pleasure beamed in every eye: every countenance was lighted up with joy: the accent of gratified satisfaction being on every tongue: all hearts were filled with the same delighted and delightful emotion. A handsome supper was prepared by Mr. Bunch and set out with considerable taste, and the well pleased party separated at an orderly hour, without the slightest circumstance having transpired to mar the pleasures or interrupt the harmony of the evening.

NARRATOR

Ladies and gentlemen!

I believe we can hear General Andrew Jackson and his party making their way up from the public square. We must quickly gather 'round and ready a hero's welcome for our most distinguished guest of honor.

For we are participants, this historic evening of May 7, 1814, on this lovely hilltop, in an event that will be recalled by Huntsvillians for generations to come.

General Jackson has interrupted his long march home to his beloved Hermitage in Nashville to be with us today. He returns from battle a true hero of this young nation, having quelled the Creek Indian uprising and quite effectively destroying that aggressive tribe at the Battle of Horeshoe Bend. With General Jackson's victory, we can now rest without the fear of savage attack on our innocent women and children.

The General and his army were met earlier this day by a distinguished committee of Huntsvillians at Fagan Spring Branch, and escorted by Captain John Winston and many of the gentlemen of our village, to the public square. We have word that there General Jackson received his due Federal salute.

And now, with the imminent arrival of the General...

Oh! Ladies and gentlemen! May I have your focused attention, please!

General Jackson is amongst us!

Colonel Leroy Pope, the Chief Justice of the Quorum and our host this evening at Echols Hill, is making his way through the crowd to greet and welcome General Andrew Jackson!

( Colonel Leroy Pope and Mrs. Pope come forward. )

COLONEL LEROY POPE

We welcome you, General Jackson, most cordially to our little village. We trust that our fair citizens have today already delivered, down on our public square, the appropriate salvos due a hero of your stature — a man who so brilliantly led his forces to forever diminish the Creek Indians at the bloody Battle of Horsehoe Bend.

Today you have most graciously allowed the people of Huntsville this opportunity to so humbly honor you. Our best wishes accompany you through life. Our most affectionate remembrance shall be your ideal. And we fervently pray the all merciful Father, the giver of every good perfect gift, to shower his blessings on your head and mete out to you long life of health and honor.
