So rapid was the growth of Huntsville and Madison County that by 1987 a new $8,000,000 library was constructed, making possible increased support for all aspects of Huntsville' cultural and intellectual community. This progress was reflected in a report published in the newsletter of the Friends of the Huntsville Madison County Public Library, September-October 1995, and reproduced here with permission.<sup>13</sup>

10 Ways the Library Improves the Quality of Life in Huntsville and Madison County

1. Some 178,023 area citizens have library cards, 70 percent of the population (the national average is 40%). On an average day, 3400 citizens visit the Main Library or its eight branch libraries.
2. The Library is the preschooler's door to learning. Loans for preschool picture books average 9,000 each month, or 108,000 per year.
3. The Library is the homework center and resource after school, in the evenings and on weekends, for public and private school students in Huntsville.
4. Reference librarians have helped local citizens answer 183,000 reference questions—one every 1.5 minutes.
5. The Huntsville Heritage Room is the official archive for the history of Huntsville, providing local scholars, newspapers, television stations, genealogists, Alabama history students, and many others with books, microfilm, historic documents, and photographs.
6. The Subregional Library for the Blind and Physically Handicapped provides Braille transcribing service and free talking books by mail, along with machines, to 414 citizens and 17 deposits. Talking book borrowings totaled 19,244 in FY 1993-94.
7. The American Library Association honored the International Media Center for its outstanding service to Huntsville's multicultural population. This department assists local residents who do not read English as their native language, as well as students studying foreign languages and people who need to learn a foreign language for work or travel abroad. It has an outstanding collection of foreign films and represents almost 50 languages.
8. Citizens dial into the Library's online catalog from home, school or office to search the holdings of the Huntsville Public Library and 16 other libraries in North Alabama. Reciprocal borrowing agreements allow access to almost a million titles in North Alabama.
9. The Library provides limited Internet access free to local residents at the Main Library.
