cursory look at the floor joists in the basement suggested that they are still fundamentally sound. Although a complete gutting may be necessary to meet your needs, you might wish to get the assessment of a structural engineer familiar with, and sympathetic to, the eccentricities of older brick and frame structures. The exterior side wall appears to be essentially sound and strong despite moisture problems, and should easily be penetrated, as necessary, for the renovation. Simply reopening the sealed-up windows along the side would make an agreeable difference.

I trust you will permit me a few closing remarks concerning the selection of an architect. Happily, there are an increasing number of architects who have experience dealing with old-building rehabilitation (as opposed to new construction only). However, it is important to select an architect who "knows" old buildings, and has a proven track record in working with them, if you are to get the best results. I would also recommend that you consider retaining an architect who is not a parishioner. Otherwise, difficulties can arise from unexpected quarters.

Thank you again for contacting us. Enclosed for your general information is a copy of the Secretary of the Interior's guidelines for the rehabilitation and restoration of historic structures. As you proceed, we would be pleased to work with your architect, to review preliminary drawings, and to be available for consultation as things move along.

With best wishes,

Robert Gamble
