The state of Georgia brought further pressure to bear upon the federal government shortly after the Creek War, demanding that the state be allowed to control the remainder of the Creek lands within its confines. President Monroe appointed Campbell and Meriwether as Commissioners to deal with the Indians. They inquired if a treaty with McIntosh would be sufficient and were told by Mr. Calhoun, the Secretary of War, that all the chiefs of the Creek Nation would have to sign any treaty involving lands to be ceded. The commissioners called a meeting of the chiefs at the Indian Springs reservation of McIntosh, but only a few attended. The Tukabatchi chief informed the commissioners that the Creeks had no more land for sale. He directed a warning to McIntosh that all sales, if any, must be in full council and approved by the Creek Nation as a whole. In spite of this warning and the previous agreement at Broken Arrow, the treaty was signed by McIntosh and a number of chiefs who occupied inferior positions among their tribes.

Menawa headed a delegation of chiefs who went to Washington to protest the ratification of the treaty. It is said that Menawa conducted himself in a calm and dignified manner while in Washington. In spite of the protests of the Indians; the misgivings of Colonel Crowell, the United States Agent; and other objections, the treaty was approved by Congress and signed by President Adams who had succeeded President Monroe during the deliberations. Trouble immediately broke out among the whites and Indians along the frontier, and after much bloodshed, the treaty was cancelled, nearly a year after its approval. Peace was again restored, but the Creeks were more bitter now than ever toward McIntosh. A council was called and the chiefs voted that McIntosh and the others who had signed the treaty must die for violating the pact made at Broken Arrow in 1811. Menawa was asked to execute the sentence, but declined, feeling that his personal hatred of McIntosh might cause public opinion to boomerang against him. Nevertheless, he finally was persuaded to carry out the edict of the chiefs.

McIntosh lived in luxury not far from the present location of Carrollton, Georgia. He had a large tavern on the federal road which passed through the Indian territory. McIntosh, a tall and graceful person, had acquired many of the qualities of a gentleman through his long association with leading army officers and others who frequented his tavern.

On the night of April 30, 1826, McIntosh was entertaining a larger number of travelers than usual. The inn resounded with merriment far into the night. No one suspected that danger lurked in the darkness. Menawa and his men reached the tavern very late in the night and surrounded the building. Speaking very deliberately, Menawa ordered the whites out, saying, "Let the white people who are in this house come out, and the women and children. We come not to injure them. McIntosh has broken the law made by himself and we have come to kill him for it." The General's son, Chilly McIntosh, a well built and handsome young man, noted for his skill as a ball player, and who had signed the treaty, escaped unrecognized by boldly leaving the tavern with a piece of baggage as though he were a guest. When all the whites had left the building, the Indians set fire to it. The flames finally drove McIntosh to the door where he was killed by a volley of bullets from Menawa's men. This ended the long period of jealousy and hatred between Menawa and McIntosh. Thomas M. Owen, in his History of Alabama, says that Menawa later regretted his part in the killing, Menawa having said that he would gladly lay down his own life to bring back to life Billy McIntosh. Owen says that Menawa sent his oldest son to fight against the Seminoles in 1855, and that he offered his own services in 1836, having changed from a savage chief of 1813 to a military leader imbued with the ideas of civilization.

Menawa opposed the emigration of the whole Creek Nation to the west. He secured permission for those who wished to remain to do so, but hardly had this privilege been granted until he himself received orders to join the emigration group moving westward. A very dramatic story is related concerning his last days in the Creek territory. It is said that he spent the last night at Oakfuskie. The next morning he crossed the Tallapoosa River and joined the others who were to go far into the land of the setting sun. He appeared very uneasy and acted as though he had forgot something. It was suggested that he return and get whatever it was that caused him so much anxiety. His reply was, "No; last evening I saw the sun set for the last time, and its light shine upon the treetops, and the land, and the water, that I am never to look upon again. No other evening will come, bringing to Menawa's eyes the rays of the setting sun upon the home he has left forever." With that he faded into history, as the time and place of his death is unknown. He no doubt died of a broken heart somewhere along the way to the west.

Martin Dam on the Tallapoosa River is symbolic of the power resources of the historic river.

further suffering. The hopes which have so long deluded them, must be driven from their last refuge. They must be made to know that their prophets are imposters, and that our strength is mighty, and will prevail. Then, and not until then, may we expect to make with them a peace that shall be lasting."

FLETCHER NAPOLEON FARRINGTON

Early in 1932 there came to Tallapoosa County a big-footed North Alabama giant standing six feet, four inches tall, and weighing two hundred fifty pounds. Agriculture was experiencing its worst period in

Fletcher N. Farrington, genial county farm agent, who is nationally known for his progressive program in soil conservation and other work among the farmers of Tallapoosa County.

American history. It was the bottom of the depression years. Cotton was selling for less than five cents a pound; hogs were $2.15 per cwt., and all other commodities were selling for proportionate prices. Under the leadership of Fletcher N. Farrington more progress has been made in agricultural pursuits in Tallapoosa County than in all the years prior to his coming to the county as its Farm Agent. When he came to the county he immediately inaugurated a program for the development of agriculture in the county, his program being in keeping with his own physical stature. His work in the county has attracted international attention. Nine foreign delegations and representatives from nearly all the states have visited the county to study the land reclamation work which has been done. Nearly 100,000 acres have been scientifically terraced.

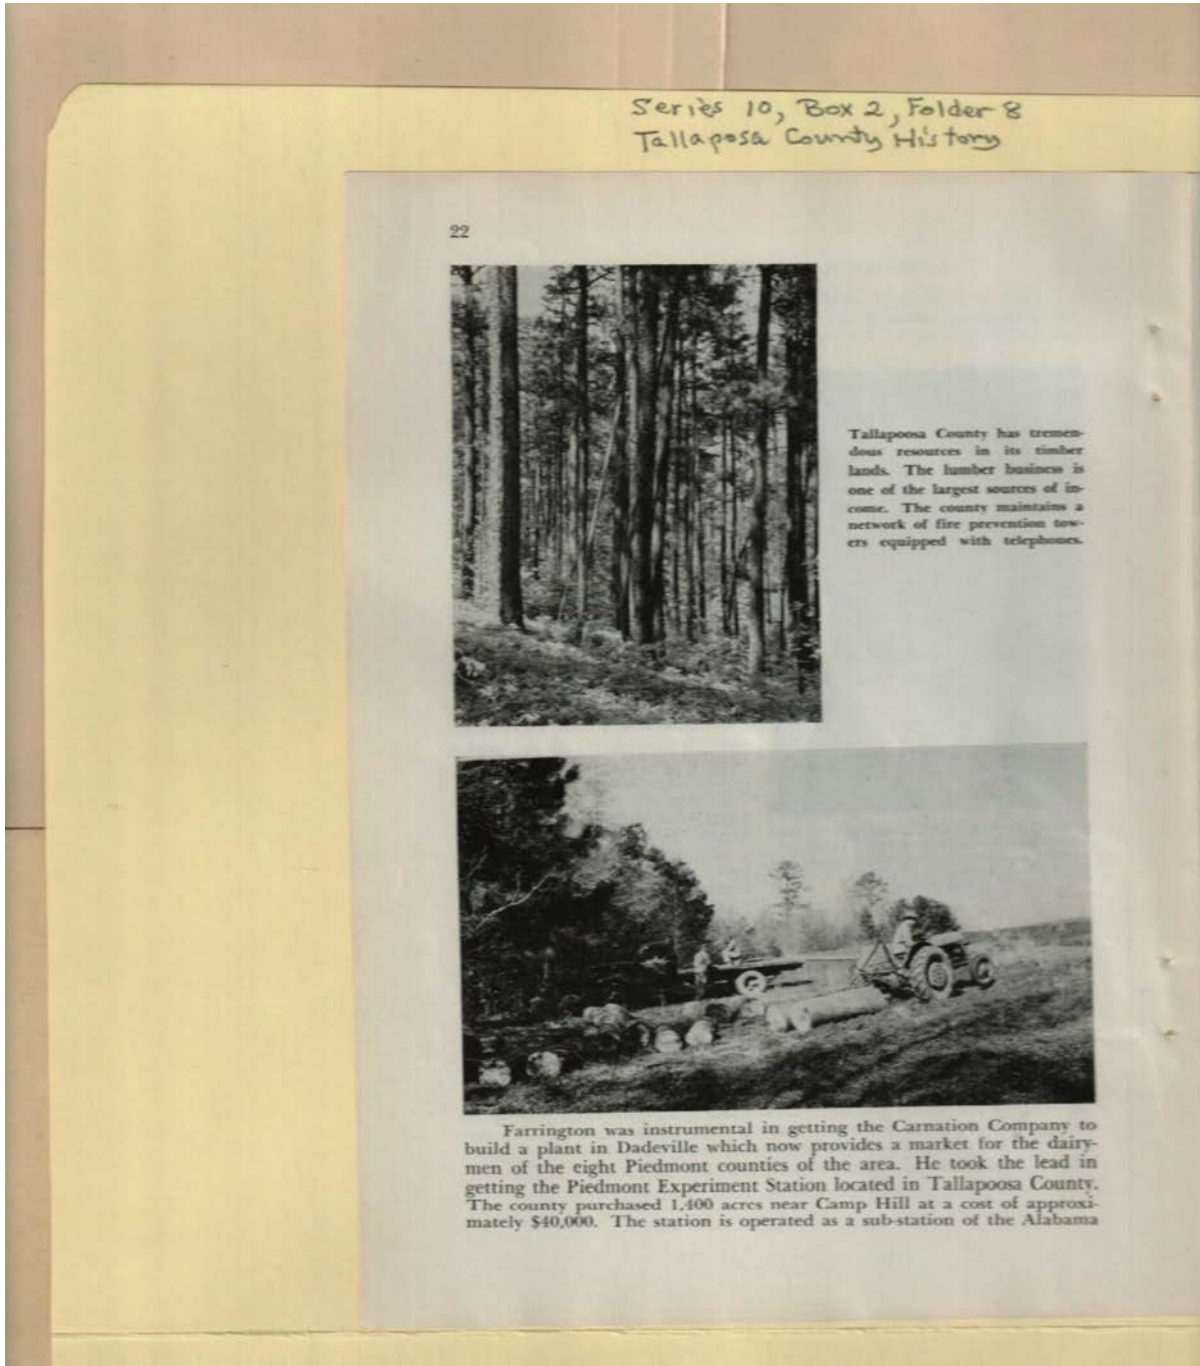

Under Farrington's leadership great strides have been made in forestry conservation, crop rotation, livestock production, and pasture maintenance. 355 farmers on 234 farms produced an average of 387 pounds of lint cotton per acre in 1950. The average production in 1930 was 145 pounds per acre. Corn production increased from an average of 11 bushels per acre in 1935 to a little less than 25 bushels per acre in 1950. The livestock population increased 41 per cent from 1940 to 1945, and there has been a tremendous increase in livestock during more recent years. Dairy cattle increased very rapidly during the same period. In 1950 Tallapoosa County had more Junior Dairymen than the next four highest counties in Alabama. 12,000 acres are planted in Kudzu, a perennial legume that can be used for temporary grazing; nearly 6,000 acres have been planted in sericea lespedeza, also a perennial and suited for summer grazing; and nearly 7,000 acres of permanent pasture land have been established. About 300 farmers of the county are growing beef cattle.

Polytechnic Institute Experiment Station at Auburn, and is demonstrating to the farmers just what can be done in the area.

Farrington has worked in close cooperation with civic clubs, chambers of commerce, industrial leaders, and business and professional men, in planning a program to reach all the people of the county. In 1934 the Tallapoosa County Terracing Association began under the leadership of the county governing body headed by Probate Judge J. P. Oliver. The Association purchased heavy machinery for use in terracing and other land reclamation work. This perhaps has been of greater immediate value to the farmers than any other project of the county farm program. The work has been carried on with great success in cooperation with the Federal Production and Marketing Administration.

The half-million dollar livestock coliseum and Piedmont Youth Center located in Dadeville has been of immense aid in promoting interest in livestock and other farm projects. The coliseum is used for livestock shows, farm and home shows, community gatherings, farm meetings, religious activities, civic activities, and for any general purpose in the public interest. The youth center has 19,000 square feet of floor space and is equipped to comfortably house a large number of young people for any 4-H, or other youth group meeting.

The Coastal Plains Community in the southern part of the county was winner in the state One Variety Contest for cotton growers in 1950, and was awarded a $2,000 prize.

One hundred fifty-four farm lakes have been built in the county, aiding in soil conservation and at the same time provide food and recreational benefits for the people.

Kiwanis Clubs, renowned for their interest in agriculture, have been organized at Dadeville, Alexander City and Camp Hill. Farrington was the first president of the club at Dadeville, having assisted in its organization in 1934. He also aided in the organization of other clubs in the county. He is a member of the Chambers of Commerce of Alexander Farrington was born on a farm in Blount County, near Blountsville, Alabama, May 25, 1902, the son of Samuel Newton and Mollie Susan Roberts Farrington. He is the fourth child in a family of eight children, four boys and four girls. He started to school at the age of eight, when he was "nearly grown," he says, at Summitt. He later attended public schools at Rock Springs, Hollypond, Albertville, Blountsville, and Boaz. He graduated from high school in 1923 at what is now Snead College at Boaz, Alabama. He taught school during the winter months and attended summer school at Alabama Polytechnic Institute for a number of years, teaching in Cullman and Etowah Counties. He graduated from Alabama Polytechnic Institute in the spring of 1930, having entered college in the fall of 1928 as a full time student.

Immediately upon graduating from college he went to Troy, Alabama, as Pike County Farm Agent. He went from Pike County to Tallapoosa County early in 1932. He was married to Eunice G. Gullage, of Gadsden, February 5, 1926. The Farringtons have four children, Annie Sue (Mrs. Paul Sherrer), Barbara, F. N., Jr., and Eunice Elizabeth.

Cotton is grown extensively throughout the county.

Bank deposits in Tallapoosa County have increased 900 per cent during the past twenty years.

There are more than 260 miles of paved roads in the county, more than half of which have been constructed since World War II.

Tallapoosa County was a favorite abode of the Indians. Their villages dotted the banks of the Tallapoosa River and other streams in the county.

Oakfuskie was one of the largest Indian villages. It is said that the British established a fort at Oakfuskie as early as 1735.

ALEXANDER CITY

Alexander City is built on the site of Indian villages. The youngest of the cities of the county, it is now the most populous, the 1950 census giving it a population of 6,433. In 1888 the population was 750. There are large textile manufacturing plants and other industries which make it one of the leading industrial centers of east Alabama.

The April 23, 1891 issue of The Weekly Dispatch, published in Alexander City, carried the following news item:

WAR CLOUDS

Russia making active preparation for impending conflict. Dispatch from St. Petersburg, Russia, says: "In spite of the peaceful utterance of government officials everybody knows that Russia is making extensive preparations for war."

CAMP HILL

Camp Hill was the camping ground for travelers on their way to Wetumpka, and for settlers entering the Indian territory.

The Lovelaces, Herrens and Smiths were early settlers near the spring before the Indians had gone. Early merchants were Meadows, Whitten and Polk. A Dr. Vaughan was the first physician. Mathew Lile was first teacher in school. Rev. Brittain Conine was the first Methodist minister.

The First Universalist Church of Camp Hill was established in 1846 with John J. Slaughter as its first pastor.

DADEVILLE

There was an Indian trading post at the site of Dadeville for some time prior to the creation of Tallapoosa County. It was the junction point of roads leading from Tennessee and Georgia to the trading posts at Wetumpka and Montgomery.

Dadeville was named for Major Francis Langhorne Dade who was killed in the Seminole War in Florida in December, 1835. The town was first incorporated in 1858, but lost its charter during the War Between the States. It was incorporated a second time in 1871. There were tanneries and shoe shops in the early days.

The churches shown at the left are typical of the progress being made in improving the rural churches in Tallapoosa County. The top view is that of the New Site Methodist Church. The Eagle Creek Baptist Church, before the addition of a portico, is shown below.

The town was laid out and the courthouse located by John Broadnax. The population in 1880 was 740. The 1950 census gave the town a population of 2,357.

It is said that Dr. William Mandon Alexander Mitchell was perhaps the first owner of a home in Dadeville. Other early settlers were Vaughn, Gresham, Lowry, Davenport, Berry, Dennis, King, Reeves, Cosby, Bostick, Hatcher, Corprew, Clark, Leftwich, Holley, Johnson, Oliver, Lane, Lisle, Goolsby, and Sturdivant.

Senator John Tyler Morgan, member of the famous Morgan and Pettus team, was admitted to the bar in Dadeville. Bozeman Bulger, noted sports writer, and writer for the Saturday Evening Post, was born in Dadeville. Allen D. Sturdivant, Judge of Probate of the county for a number of years, was a Dadeville citizen.

Solomon Hydenfeldt, a Jew, gave the site for the churches in Dadeville. A communication by him addressed to Hon. Reuben Chapman, Governor of Alabama, on the subject of Slave Immigration, was published by McCormick & Brittain, printers, in 1849.

Hydenfeldt was a native of Charleston, South Carolina, and came to Alabama during the early days of Tallapoosa County. He was judge of the county court in 1840. He later moved to Russell County, Alabama, then to California where he became a justice in the supreme court of that state.

The Dadeville Female Seminary opened in 1853 with Benjamin T. Smith, principal; his wife, assistant; Miss Katherine Clark, primary; and Miss Bedell, music. The school was incorporated by members of Tohopeka Lodge #71, Dadeville Chapter #45, of the Masonic Order.

Graefenberg Medical Institute, the first medical school in Alabama, received its charter in 1852. Dr. P. M. Shepard was proprietor.

In 1858, Dr. Shepard was granted a charter for the Winston Male College.

The Tallapoosa County High School was established by an act of the state legislature, August 7, 1907. There were seventy-five students in September, 1910.

Freight was hauled from Loachapoka until 1873 when the Savannah and Memphis Railroad was completed from Columbus, Georgia. The railroad was later known as the Columbus and Western, and is now a part of the Central of Georgia-Illinois Central system.

This building was originally the United States Hotel, and was erected about 1836. It has been owned by the Dennis family for more than a century and has been known as the Dennis Hotel most of that time. It was in this hotel that Johnson Jones Hooper wrote many of his humorous stories, among which were the ADVENTURES OF SIMON SUGGS. This building is located at Dadeville.

Charles T. Thweatt, a lawyer, was editor of the Tallapoosa Banner and Times in 1862. President Grant appointed him Consul General to Brazil.

Other newspapers published in Dadeville were The Tallapoosa News, 1873; Johnston and Oliver, publishers; East Alabama Headlight; The Dadeville Headlight, 1874; The Tallapoosa Gazette, 1880; The Tallapoosa Democrat, 1884; and more recently, The Peoples Advocate, The New Era, Free Press, Herald, Courier, and Spot Cash.

In the November 24, 1910, issue of The Dadeville Spot Cash a statement attributed to Major Jere C. Dennis said that war with Japan was inevitable. That was thirty-one years before the war with Japan actually took place.

Tom Martin was born at Scottsboro, Jackson County, Alabama August 13, 1881, the son of William Logan and Margaret Ledbetter Martin. His father was Attorney General of Alabama from 1889 to 1894. His great great grandfather, Frank Martin, fought in the American Revolution. The Martins came to Madison County, Alabama, from Virginia in 1808.

The family moved to Montgomery when Tom was quite young and he studied at Starke University School. He studied law at the University of Alabama, and began his practice at Montgomery under the guidance of his father in 1901. He was appointed Assistant Attorney General for the state in 1903 and served until 1911.

He married Mary Evelyn Tyson, of Montgomery, on June 4, 1919.

Martin became Vice-President of Alabama Power Company in 1915, was elevated to the presidency in 1920, and has served as Chairman of the Board since 1950. He was President of The Commonwealth and Southern Corporation from 1929 to 1932.

Martin Dam, largest of the hydro-electric power projects on the Tallapoosa River.

He is a human dynamo of untold and seemingly endless energy. A man of vision, courage, and leadership, he is interested in promoting the welfare of the people of the South in general, and Alabama in particular. His was the vision and the energy which resulted in the formation of the Southern Research Institute, a scientific research organization, of which he is President. Through his efforts its capital funds were subscribed.

An outstanding scholar, Martin is a member of Phi Beta Kappa Fraternity. He is a member of The Newcomen Society of England, the Knights of Pythias, Rotary International, the Masonic Order, and other fraternal organizations. He is a Democrat and a member of the Presbyterian Church.

YATES DAM

The "Upper Tallassee" plant of the Alabama Power Company was officially named "Yates Dam" at dedicatory ceremonies on June 28, 1947. The bronze tablet was unveiled by Margaret Yates, daughter of Eugene Adams Yates, for whom the dam was named. The inscription reads as follows:

YATES DAM

Named by the Board of Directors of Alabama Power Company

in honor of

in recognition of his vision in foreseeing the possibilities of the development and distribution of power in the Southeastern states, his ability as an engineer and administrator in the construction and operation of power projects in Alabama, and his personal qualities which have endeared him to friends and associates.

Eugene Yates was born in Elizabeth, New Jersey, November 7, 1880, the son of Joseph Johnson and Elizabeth Ann Whaley Yates. He attended the public schools of New Jersey and graduated from historic Rutgers College, New Brunswick, N. J., in 1902. Soon after graduation he was employed by the Pennsylvania Railroad Company. He later worked in New York City and Canada.

Yates went to Birmingham, Alabama, in 1911 as construction engineer for an interurban electric railroad known as "The Tidewater Line." About that time James Mitchell was selecting a group of outstanding young men for associates in the Alabama Power Company. Eugene Yates was appointed Chief Engineer. He was later to work on plans for integrating the operations of the power companies in order to pool the energy generated for the fullest benefit in time of war as well as in peacetime.

He became Vice-President and General Manager of Alabama Power Company in 1923, and in 1924 he was named Vice-President and General Manager of the Southeastern Power and Light Company. He later headed the engineering and construction work of The Commonwealth and Southern Corporation. When the latter company was dissolved and The Southern Company organized, Yates was named President of the new company. He is now Chairman of the Board of The Southern Company and a director of Alabama Power Company.

In April, 1914, he married Margaret Wendell Polk, of Texas. The Yates have three children, Eugene A. Yates, Jr., Margaret, and Betty (Mrs. M. Shepard).

It was in 1912 that Yates first went to Dadeville where he spent the night, and the next day drove, with a team, from Dadeville to Cherokee Bluffs, Kowaliga, and Alexander City. He made many trips while studying the problems involved in the erection of what is now Martin Dam. There were the problems of relocation of cemeteries, the Central of Georgia Railroad, and changes in the public roads of the county. Many hardships and inconveniences were encountered. There were few good roads in the county, and the automobile had not come into general use.

Yates Dam is at the site of the first hydro-electric plant erected in Alabama. The "Montgomery Plant," as it was known, was put into service in 1902 with a capacity of 8,500 horsepower. The 25 mile long 33,000 volt transmission line was the first long distance line to be erected in Alabama and was one of the first such lines in the United States. Yates Dam has a capacity of 75,000 horsepower.

faculty was apparently composed entirely of father and sons. Philip Madison, Jr., graduated in 1858 and joined the faculty. In 1860, the third son, Orlando Tyler, was graduated at the age of seventeen, and became Professor of Obstetrics and Diseases of Women and Children. He is said to have officiated at childbirth at the age of fifteen. Dr. Shepard's daughter, Louisa, was awarded the degree of Doctor of Medicine, being the first woman to be awarded this degree by a southern medical school. Public opinion discouraged her taking up practice. She married and moved to Texas.

In April, 1861, a bedside clinic was held in the cabin of a sick negro woman not far from the campus. The Professor's diagnosis was peritonitis and the prognosis grave. Other physicians who had seen her gave out a different diagnosis. The patient died and was buried. Dr. Shepard's pride was aroused. Permission was obtained and an autopsy was performed before the class at the open grave. Signs of generalized peritonitis were found, much to the gratification of the Professor. In performing the autopsy he cut his finger; a few hours later he had a chill and soon developed evidences of septicemia, and in a few days he was dead.

His death occurred just as the War Between the States broke out. Either catastrophe would have been sufficient to snuff out the life of the little medical school. During the war Dr. Tyler Shepard became a bugler in the escort of General Joseph E. Wheeler. It is not known whether the failure of the Confederate government to utilize his medical training was due to the nature of his specialties, or to his youth. The latter is the more likely reason. Philip Madison, Jr., served two years in the Confederate army as a cavalryman. John did not enter military service. Although he was only twenty-four years old, he had a large family, and was needed at home. He already had a reputation as an able physician, too, and before his death was considered the greatest physician of his time in the Dadeville area.

For many years after the war it was the dream of the three oldest sons, and also of the fourth son, Joseph, whose education after the war was relatively elaborate, that Graefenberg should be rehabilitated, but the extreme poverty of the community during Reconstruction days prevented. In 1873, twelve years after the school had closed, the buildings burned, with it the library, anatomical museum and school records. Four sons of the founder of Graefenberg, three of them trained entirely by their father, continued to practice medicine in the community and were highly respected physicians. Among their descendants are a number who have through exceptional ability acquired distinction in various fields. Only one of their descendants entered the field of medicine and his career was cut short by early death.

Sheepskin diploma awarded to Orlando Tyler Shepard.

Although accurate information concerning the Graefenberg Medical Institute is far from complete, it is known to have been recognized as a full-fledged medical school from 1852 to 1861, and graduated about fifty physicians. Total expenses for a session including board, washing and lodging, "Diploma and Honor," was $135 to $145. The tuition fee was $60, except for special rates from time to time, especially during summer sessions, when it would be $30 or $40. If a student failed to graduate at the end of one session he was allowed to repeat by the payment of a $10 library fee. The students lived in an annex to Dr. Shepard's home and had their meals with the family. Encyclopedias, textbooks, and a few journals were to be found in the library. There were cadavers for dissection, kept in large metal vats, and several skeletons. There was a pharmacy in which medicines were compounded from medicinal herbs which were grown in a garden near the school. Certain chemical apparatus was available for simple demonstrations. All these were housed in a large three-story frame building in which the classrooms and an auditorium were located for use by the various schools. Teaching was by lectures and quizzes. There was bedside teaching, too. Bible study was included in the curriculum. An alumnus said there was nothing but one unceasing round of study and review day and night without the thousand and one temptations and inducements to vice and immorality always incident to a large city. In 1860, when Dr. Shepard was trying to get financial aid from the state legislature, the physicians who made up the State Medical Association demanded that the state establish a first class medical school at Mobile, then the largest city in the state. They emphasized the advantages of having a medical school in a city. Dr. Shepard then pointed out the moral safety of his students as well as their safety from the devastating epidemics of yellow fever and cholera to which Mobile and New Orleans were then subject.

It seems that most of the graduates of Graefenberg entered immediately upon the practice of medicine, however, some later obtained degrees from other schools.

Fevers were the great problems of the medical profession in Shepard's day. In 1850, physicians of Alabama were just beginning to learn to distinguish between the various forms of malarial fevers and typhoid fever. Malaria was the biggest problem of all. Marion Sims, who lived just sixty miles away, in the story of his life, states that he saw families practically wiped out by the disease in 1836 and also in 1840.

for Polk, in dinners, flags, and other items. He even tried preaching in 1845. He admitted that his two sermons did not stir the congregations, saying, "Nothing but the smell of brimstone and the awful singeing fires of an endless hell could have started them, and hardly that." He was first a member of the Methodist church, but withdrew because of political troubles. He later joined the Baptist church.

Although he dealt with his children with the sternness of a puritanical disciplinarian, he held their respect and affection. His family-faculty maintained a fine esprit de corps. In his day, hard liquor was on sale at most grocery stores and drunkenness was common; even the medical profession of that day deplored the dreadful abuse of alcohol. He prohibited liquor on his property and enforced his law.

He was a lover of music and included a capable music instructor on his faculty. He encouraged the development of the musical talents of his children, and the family of his oldest son later acquired considerable local fame for its brass band.

Dr. Shepard was in many ways typical of his time. It was a time of tremendous material expansion; new lands were being opened, new communities being formed in which one's position depended upon his ability to get ahead in the world. It was a time when ambition could give free rein to the imagination.

Author's note:

Graefenberg was the name of a medical institution in Austria where hydro-therapy was emphasized, and was the probable source of the name for the Graefenberg Medical Institute, especially since hydro-therapy was a popular fad of the day. Dr. Shepard, no doubt believing that some good was to be found in all the popular fads of the day, stated in his first announcement concerning the medical school that "Allopathy, Homeopathy, Hydro-pathy, and Botany would be taught scientifically." However irregular this may seem to present day students of medical sciences, it must be remembered that Dr. Shepard lived during a period when many fads came and went. Any new idea was received with skepticism by many, but Dr. Shepard does not appear to have been one to refuse to grasp new opportunities for bettering the profession. One hundred years from now many of the present day methods no doubt will appear as ridiculous as some of those of Shepard's day appear today.

Major General Thomas Wade Herren

He graduated from the University of Alabama in 1917, just after the outbreak of the first World War. He was commissioned a second lieutenant in the Field Artillery Reserve on August 15, 1917.

He went to France with the Seventy-Eighth Field Artillery in July, 1918, being engaged with that unit at Le Valdahan and Liffel le Grande. He returned to the United States in June, 1919.

Herren was Recruiting Officer for the District of Springfield, Massachusetts, for four years from June, 1922. He was later stationed at various army posts throughout the country, being raised to the rank of lieutenant colonel in 1940.

During World War II he served in the European Theater of Operations with the Seventieth Infantry Division. As Brigadier General, he commanded three regiments of the division during the bitter fighting of the Ardennes-Alsace campaigns during December, 1944, and January, 1945.

He was stationed in Tokyo, Japan, for a time during 1949, returning to the United States to become Chief of Special Services for the U. S. Army, with headquarters in Washington, D. C., having been promoted to Major General on June 17, 1949. Effective March 1, 1950, he was made Commanding General of the Military District of Washington, D. C.

General Herren was married to Lillian Corcoran, of El Paso, Texas, in 1930. They have two sons; Thomas W. Herren, Jr., born at Fort McPherson, Georgia, in 1933; and John D. Herren, born at Fort Oglethorpe, Georgia, in 1934.

JOHNSON JONES HOOPER

The scenes of many of the humorous stories by Johnson Jones Hooper were laid in Tallapoosa County. The Adventures of Simon Suggs tell of happenings at Dudleyville, Dadeville, Sandy Creek, Oakfuskie, and others. There are stories of how the Indians were cheated; descriptions of camp meetings, square dances, and other events; and just plain exaggerations about fictional characters. It is said that Bird H. Young, an early settler, was the inspiration for the Simon Suggs character, although it has been said that Young was known as an honorable citizen. Hooper was staying at the old Dennis Hotel in Dadeville when many of the stories were written.

people were present at the courthouse in Dadeville on the day of the examination, and Mitchell told of an incident which stood out prominently in his mind years later. A former Mitchell slave was present, and when the Chairman of the Examining Board proclaimed Sidney the victor, the negro, a large six-footer, leaped high in the air and shouted so that he was heard above the din of the crowd, "I knowed us Mitchells would get it. You can't beat us Mitchells."

Upon graduating from Annapolis he was assigned to the U. S. S. Trenton, the ship being stationed at the Brooklyn Navy Yard, and Mitchell was to have a part in a very historical piece of work. The Trenton was to be equipped with incandescent lights, being the first battleship in the world to be thus equipped, and he was to get his first insight into what electricity could do. The ship was also being put into order for taking members of a special Korean Mission home by way of Europe. The Mission included a Prince of the Royal Blood and was the first step of the Hermit Kingdom to establish intercourse with foreign nations. The art of insulation had not been developed and soon after the battleship proudly went to sea, radiant with the new incandescent lights, trouble was encountered. This was remedied at Gibraltar, however, and no further trouble was experienced.

The Trenton was to have been met at Gibraltar by the United States Mediterranean Squadron, but for some reason was not there when the proud ship arrived. The British and French fleets, both mobilized, due to a struggle between France and Britain for control of Egypt and the Suez Canal, were present at Gibraltar. Thus when the Trenton sent up rockets to signal the flagship of the United States Fleet, the signals threw the British fleet into a spasm, thinking it was perhaps signals from the French flagship that hostilities should begin. Searchlights from the British ships were immediately focused on the Trenton, blinding those aboard. However, before leaving Gibraltar they were able to get even. Two powerful searchlights were ordered from Paris and rushed to the Trenton. By concentrating the power of each four-lamp generator into one lamp they converted the same type used by the British into lights four times as powerful, and when the Trenton sent up signals upon leaving only to have the British again turn their searchlights on them, the Trenton was able to blind the British and steam proudly away. These were the first searchlights to be installed on an American warship.

Mitchell was transferred from the Trenton to the U. S. S. Quinnebang of the Mediterranean Squadron upon arriving at Alexandria, and after two years service he returned to the United States. He had grown tired of the uneventful routine of life on a warship and longed for an opportunity for individual initiative. He was offered a job in Nicaragua through the efforts of Admiral Ammen, but got a release from the Admiral when he ran into a school chum in Seattle who was connected with the electric light industry.

When Sidney was discharged from the Navy at Seattle, Washington, on June 30, 1885, he was twenty-three years old. For the first time in his life he was completely on his own. Thirty-five years later he related to Irvin E. Rockwell the story of how he began his life in the electric power industry. Rockwell tells the story in his book, The Saga of American Falls Dam.

pletely vanished. Slowly, Mitchell was able to persuade investors to again enter the electric utility field, and for twenty-eight years he headed the company as President and Chairman of the Board, leading it to a top place among the utility organizations of the nation, with many interests in foreign nations. At the advise of his physicians, he retired as Chairman of the Board in 1933. At that time he was a director in thirty-four corporations, nearly all utility companies.

Sidney Mitchell was a physical as well as a mental giant. He has been compared with the Harrimans, the Hills, the McKays, the Dollars, and other great pioneers who did so much in the development of the resources of the United States. One is reminded of the difficulties overcome, the hardships suffered, the courage they exercised, and the magnitude of the conquests such men achieved. Mitchell was a man so modest and self-effacing that his name was little known outside the electric industry. One of Mitchell's closest associates described him as follows:

"He had great physical strength and mental vigor. He lived out-of-doors a large part of his life before going to New York. That helped him carry the load there."

"His memory was prodigious; his eye conspicuously good. I never knew him to forget anything that he ever saw. He could visualize and relate with a great deal of local flavor a multitude of incidents in his early life, many of them the kind most men quickly forget. His eye memory was often the source of embarrassment to managers in the field who could not recall some features of the properties they were operating."

"He had unusual vision, was a tireless worker, and possessed the faculty of getting people to work with him. He was conciliatory, but always insisted on his rights."

He has often been referred to as the thaumaturgus of the electric power industry.

His motto was: "Be thorough; try to know your job better than anyone else."

His first wife, Mrs. Alice B. Mitchell, whom he married in 1893, died in 1941. There was a son, Sidney A. Mitchell, by this marriage. In 1942, Mitchell married Mrs. Neva Fenno Palmer, widow of George S. Palmer, manufacturer and philanthropist. He died at his home in New York City, February 17, 1944.

Benjamin Russell, founder of The Russell Manufacturing Company, Alexander City, started the business in the small building shown below in 1902 with equipment bought on credit. The business has since expanded into one of the most important textile organizations in the South. A view of part of the present day plant is shown on the opposite page.

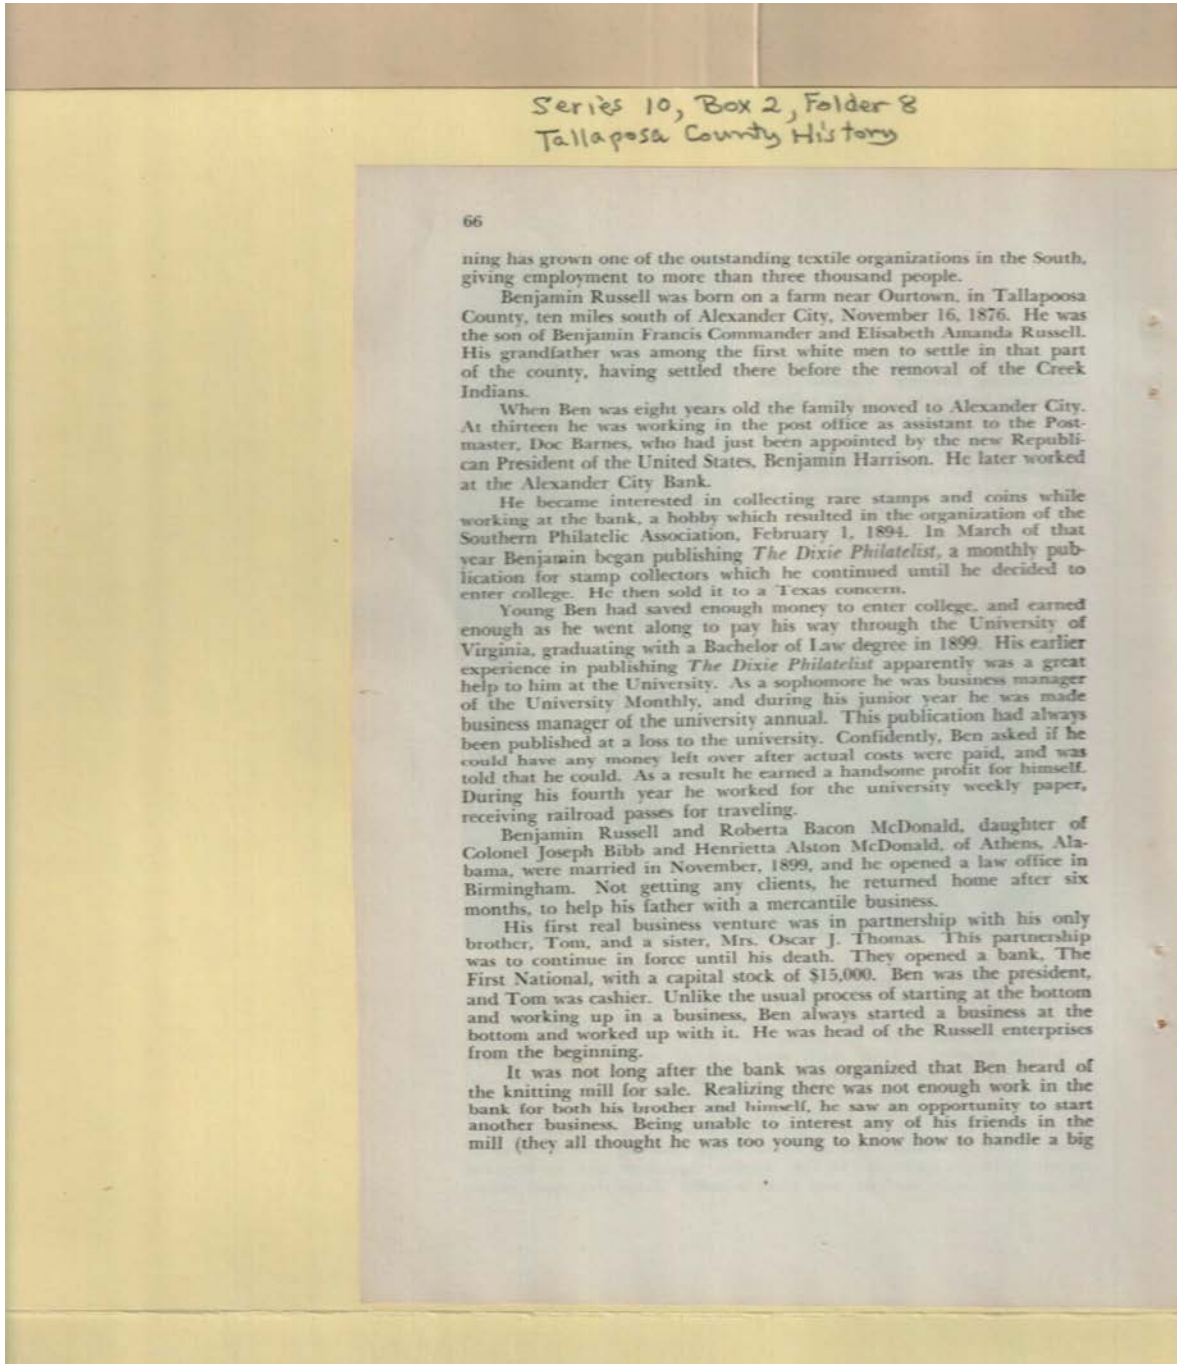

in manufacturing. Much to his dismay he discovered that garments selling for 60¢ were costing over $1.00 each to produce! No wonder the former owner was forced to sell! But with enough orders already on hand to continue operations for six months, he was determined to find a way to keep costs below the selling price and at the same time produce a quality product. Other mills were making money. Why couldn't they? Thus he took the employees of the mill into his confidence and told them the problems they all faced together. Production records were kept and at the end of each day they knew just what had taken place during that day. Records were kept as to the cost of cotton, coal, water, labor, insurance, and all other items entering into the cost of manufacturing a garment. In this manner they were able to improve the product, lower the cost, and make a profit. From this small begin-

THE REALITY

The new building was nearing completion when this photograph was made, and shows the building as it appeared about July 1, 1951.

The Christians

Christiana Christian Church was admitted to the Georgia and Alabama Conference of Christian Churches, October 1, 1891, while the Conference was in session at Union Grove. The original records of the church were lost in a fire which destroyed the Archibald Jennings home, but some information has been gleaned from the Conference records. The records indicate that the church was organized in 1891 with 31 charter members. James D. Elder was the first pastor, although his brother, Thomas H. Elder and George D. Hunt had both preached in the community during the organizational period, and credit is due all three persons for the organization of the church.

The original deed to the church property was by Archibald Jennings and wife, Mary A. Jennings. An additional tract was deeded to the church by Olin C. Dabbs and wife, Lorine Dabbs, in 1950.

Eighteen ministers have served the church as pastor from 1891 to 1951. They are, in the order of their pastorates: 1891-92, J. D. Elder; 1892-94, T. H. Elder; 1894-97, H. W. Elder; 1897-99, J. D. Elder; 1899-1900, J. D. Garrison; 1900-02, W. R. Knight; 1902-06, G. D. Hunt; 1906-09, J. H. Milam; 1909-10, J. D. Dollar; 1910-20, C. W. Carter; 1920-25, G. H. Veazey; 1925-35, C. W. Carter; 1935-37, Olin E. Sheppard; 1937-40, John Taylor; 1940-46, Ross Ensminger; 1946-47, P. F. Bechtold; 1947, F. P. Ensminger; 1947, Raymond Berry; 1947-48, S. M. Penn; 1948-49, G. R. Walker; 1949, Olin E. Sheppard.

The church has had only five clerks during its entire history. J. W. Vines was the first clerk, serving from 1891 to 1898. W. A. "Buck" Jennings was clerk from 1898 to 1903. Robert Samuel Duck served from 1903 to 1928. Hiram G. Duck was clerk from 1928 to 1950. Mrs. James Brasell was elected clerk in 1950.

After some time it was decided to build a new building, utilizing all the materials possible from the old building in order to keep the cost down as low as possible.

A fund raising campaign was launched with a Home Coming Day Program on Sunday, September 4, 1949. A ground-breaking ceremony was held on Sunday, September 18, 1949, with J. W. W. Duck, senior deacon, moving the first shovelful of dirt at the site of the new building. The Reverend George D. Hunt was present and took part in the ceremony. Barrett T. Ingram, another deacon; and the pastor, G. Roy Walker, were other participants in the ceremonies. When fully completed and equipped the plant will have a value in excess of $25,000.00.

James Doctor Elder

Christiana Christian Church was organized by James Doctor Elder in 1891. The church was admitted to the Georgia-Alabama Conference of Christian Churches in October, 1891, with J. D. Elder as its first pastor. The name of the church was changed to Elder Congregational Christian Church in 1949.

THOMAS HARTWELL ELDER

Thomas Hartwell Elder, second pastor of Christiana Christian Church, was born in Chambers County, Alabama, December 28, 1846,

Thomas Hartwell Elder

the son of Wyche Malone and Mary Jane Burt Elder. His father was one of the pioneer ministers of the Christian Church in Alabama. Thomas Hartwell grew up in Chambers County and entered the ministry when quite young. He served as pastor of many churches in Alabama, and it is said that he would walk miles to his appointments, often removing his shoes in order to rest his feet.

He married Josie Love about the year 1867, and to them were born eight children. He died in Randolph County, Alabama, November 2, 1915.

It is said by some of the old timers of the Elder community that Thomas Hartwell Elder was the first of the Elders to preach in the community at the old Pleasant Hill school house, and that much of the credit for the organization of the Christiana Christian Church should go to him. His brother, James Doctor Elder, was the first pastor, according to the official records, and has been credited with the actual organizational work in the beginning.

Thomas Hartwell Elder served as pastor of the church from 1891 to 1894, being succeeded by his nephew, Hilliard Walter Elder.

J. D. GARRISON

J. D. Garrison was pastor of Christiana Christian Church from 1899 to 1900.

The Reverend Emory M. Carter, of Youngsville, North Carolina, who was for many years scribe for the Georgia and Alabama, and the Alabama Conferences of Christian Churches, says that Mr. Garrison was licensed at the same time he was, namely, October, 1898, at Beulah Church, Girard, Alabama. The Conference records show that he was reported ill at the Conference in session at Oak Grove, Georgia, in 1906, and that a special offering amounting to $20.75 was received for his benefit. His name was dropped from the Conference roll in 1920 because there were no reports of his having been in active pastoral work in the years just prior to that time, and because the Conference had not had any contact with him for some time.

No source of information has been found concerning his early life, or anything about him since 1920.

been changed and the place of his birth is now in Lee County, just south of Riverview, Alabama.

The family moved to Tallapoosa County, near Daviston, when he was young, and he attended the Daviston school. He united with the Daviston Christian Church during the ministry of the Reverend James Doctor Elder, and was licensed to preach when he was about sixteen years of age, by the Beulah Christian Church at Truett. He preached his first sermon at Everglades School in Tallapoosa County, being much encouraged by words of commendation by a member of a Baptist church who talked with him after the sermon. He served as pastor of nearly every church of the Christian denomination in the state of Alabama, and some in Georgia. Some of the pastorates were for long periods of time, his total years at Beulah Church, Truett, being nearly 50, 33 of which were consecutive years.

He struggled hard to get a college education in order to better prepare himself for the ministry, the profession he chose at the age of 30. The meager pay he received from the small rural churches he served during his college years was of little help toward his college expenses; he had a family to support, too. It was sheer grit and determination and his earnest desire to do his best for the Church that kept him going during these trying years. He had attended the public schools of Tallapoosa County during his youth, and after deciding to enter the ministry he attended Bethlehem College (now Southern Union), Wadley, Alabama. Later, he went to Elon College, in North Carolina, where it was a triumphant day for him in May, 1928, when, at the age of 38, he received his degree.

Guy Hartwell Veazey

He married Maude Davis of Alexander City, January 30, 1915. There are three children by this union: Beuna, now Mrs. G. W. Culpepper, Columbus, Georgia; Charles, who married Katherine Hitchcock, and lives with his family in Chattanooga, Tennessee; and Martha (Mrs. John D. Vance), of Mason City, Iowa. Mrs. Maude Davis Veazey died at New Market, Virginia, August 16, 1947, and he married Mabel Higgs, of Shenandoah, Virginia, January 30, 1949.

He was licensed by the Alabama Conference of Christian Churches in session at New Harmony Church near Cragford, Alabama, October 13, 1920. Four days later he preached his first sermon. That was at Christiana Christian Church, Elder community, and he served the church as pastor from 1920 to 1925. He was ordained at Wadley, Alabama, October 13, 1921, and has served churches in Alabama, Georgia, Virginia, and North Carolina. He is now pastor of High Point Congregational Christian Church, High Point, North Carolina.

up on the farm there. He attended school in the county.

He married Lela Clifton December 24, 1907. She died in April, 1920, and he was later married to May Barfield. There is one son, Vesta, by the first marriage, and five sons, Robert Vincent, John David, Elton Bomer, Jesse Calvin, and Elmer Grant, and one daughter, Mary Joyce, by the second marriage.

John Taylor

He entered the ministry in 1916, being licensed January 30th and ordained November 30th of that year. His papers were signed by G. O. Lankford, President or Moderator of the Alabama Conference, E. M. Carter, Secretary, G. D. Hunt and C. W. Carter. He has served a number of churches in the East Alabama Association of Congregational Christian Churches, and was pastor of Christiana Church from 1937 to 1940. He is now pastor of McGuire's Chapel Church.

He received his inspiration and urge for the work of the ministry from a great uncle of the first Mrs. Taylor, a Methodist minister by the name of John Pointer, of Louisiana, who conducted revival services near his home in Randolph County.

WILLIAM RICHARD KNIGHT

William Richard Knight

William Richard Knight, who was pastor of Christiana Church from 1900 to 1901, was born in Tallapoosa County,¹ Alabama, January 2, 1849. He grew up an orphan, attended the county schools, and married Sara Jane Davis, of Heard County, Georgia.

Very little is known of his early life, but he was a farmer, too, along with his work as pastor of rural churches in Chambers, Clay, Randolph and Tallapoosa Counties.

There were eight children in the Knight family, one of whom, Mrs. Nora Knight Horton, of Abanda, Alabama, is the only living charter member of Mt. Zion Christian Church, Randolph County, a church organized by her father. According to Mrs. Horton, he always admonished the family to attend Sunday School at Mt. Zion when he was to be away preaching at some other church.

"Uncle Billy," as he was widely known in later years, was devoted to

He died in Roanoke, Alabama, January 16, 1930, at the age of eighty-one.

ROSS ENSMINGER

Ross Ensminger, the second son of Fred Patterson and Anne Bennett Ensminger, was born at Winter Park, Florida, June 13, 1901. His brothers are William W. and John H.

When he was ten the family moved to Colorado where his father went for his health. In 1920 they moved to Demorest, Georgia, and young Ross entered Piedmont College where he studied for two years. He later attended Carleton College, in Minnesota, graduating from that institution in 1925. While at Carleton he was a star on the track team, setting a record in the 880 yard run. From Carleton he went to Yale Divinity School, then to Union Theological Seminary, receiving his B.D. degree from the Seminary in 1928.

Ross Ensminger

He married Margaret Goodhue, of Dennison, Minnesota, on June 12, 1928. They had met while students at Carleton College. The Ensmingers have four daughters, Ruth Mary, who graduated from Iowa State College in 1950; Katheryn Ann; Beth Elaine; and Margaret (Peggy).

In the fall of 1928 he went to Elon College, North Carolina, as Associate Professor in the Department of Religious Education. While at Elon he was ordained to the ministry by both the Congregational and Christian denominations, some time before the merger of the two bodies. He left Elon to do graduate work at the University of Chicago Divinity School. He went from Chicago to Minnesota where he served as pastor of a number of churches. In 1934 he was called to the Presidency of Southern Union College, Wadley, Alabama, in which capacity he served very diligently for twelve years. He is now on the staff of Blackburn College, Carlinville, Illinois, in the Department of Sociology, having gone there from Southern Union in 1946.

It was while serving as President of Southern Union College that he was pastor of Christiana Church, being the pastor from 1940 to 1946.

In 1914 he went to Colorado for his health, and during his stay there he served as pastor of Congregational churches in Lyons and Denver. He returned to the South in 1920 and served as Superintendent of Congregational Christian churches in the Carolinas, Kentucky, Tennessee, Alabama and West Florida, until he reached retirement age in 1942.

He organized and built Hunt Memorial Congregational Christian Church, in Alexander City, Alabama, the new church being dedicated in 1947. He has also served as pastor of Antioch and McGuire's Chapel, and as supply pastor of a number of churches in East Alabama. He served Christiana Church as supply pastor during part of 1946 and 1947.

A tireless worker, he accepted the presidency of Southern Union College, Wadley, Alabama, in 1947, and served for one year, being named President Emeritus and Financial Secretary in 1948. He now devotes his full time in the interest of the college. A very devoted and consecrated man, he is happiest when doing something for others, and has always been keenly interested in opportunities for youth. Much of his time and energy has been spent in the field of education. This work was shared wholeheartedly by Mrs. Ensminger until her death in 1947. She taught for many years at Star, North Carolina; Piedmont College, Demorest, Georgia; and Southern Union College, Wadley, Alabama. She was a leader in the Women's work of the Congregational Christian churches.

RAYMOND BERRY

Raymond Berry was born on a farm in Marion County, near Hackleburg, Alabama, June 14, 1926, the second of seven children, four boys and three girls, born to Elmer and Mary Ford Berry. His maternal grandfather, J. R. Ford, was a minister in the Freewill Baptist Church.

He attended grade school in the Fairview community under Mrs. Grace P. Fleming who was also his Sunday School teacher, and to whom he ascribes much credit for helping him find a solid rock upon which to build a life of usefulness. He says that the Reverend Charles T. Lunsford, minister of the Fairview Congregational Church, has been to him what Paul was to Timothy, and has helped him see the need for intensive training for the work of the ministry.

Young Raymond completed his high school work at Hackleburg High in 1945, then loafed a year trying to find himself. In the fall of 1946 he entered Southern Union College, Wadley, Alabama, as a ministerial student. While attending Southern Union he served as pastor of several rural churches, being pastor of Chris-

Christian Church of Richland. Later, he returned to the North Georgia area, going from there to Alabama in 1944 as pastor of the First Christian Church, Roanoke.
